ABSTRACT

The discussion will present the results of a study conducted for the Ministry of Social Development of Argentina on the Potenciar Trabajo program (2021-2022). It will focus on the analysis of the labor trajectories of women participants, characterized by a high degree of structural informality. Based on sociodemographic and labor variables—such as occupations, care-related tasks, family conditions, and educational level—the discussion will address the extent to which these types of programs promote labor inclusion or, on the contrary, reinforce existing informality. The discussion will be in Spanish.
