ABSTRACT

This lecture will have three parts: one providing general context on informality in Mexico and its socioeconomic characteristics, based on data from the National Survey of Occupation and Employment (ENOE) by INEGI and minimum wage data from CONASAMI, Mexico; another examining the evolution of Mexican generations and their varying relationships with informal employment, using ILO data for Mexico; and a third presenting a preview of ongoing qualitative research on the life trajectories of informal street food workers. The session will be in Spanish with automatic translation.
