ABSTRACT

This presentation examines how digitalisation is reshaping the boundaries between formal and informal work in Europe, challenging traditional welfare-state arrangements. It explores emerging forms of informality linked to digital culture and AI, including digital addiction, the evolution from “Citizen 3.0” to “Citizen 4.0”, and the use of ChatGPT. The discussion also considers regulatory and ethical responses and the need for new approaches to monitoring and defining the boundaries between formality and informality. The session will be in English.
