PRESENTATION

Informality, mobility and migration are interconnected features of contemporary societies, shaping labour markets, organisations and individual trajectories across different social, economic and institutional contexts. Their interaction raises important questions about employment, inclusion, regulation, access to opportunities and changing forms of work.

This workshop invites theoretical and empirical contributions exploring these phenomena, both individually and through their intersections. Attention will be given to issues such as gender, digital technologies and information systems, labour and professional mobility, migration, organisational practices, and the social and economic implications of informality.

Given the complexity of these processes, the workshop encourages interdisciplinary dialogue and welcomes contributions from economics, human resource management, psychology, sociology,
